

CONTRIBUTORS

Hugh Gusterson is a professor of sociology and anthropology at George Mason University. From 1992 to 2006 he taught as a professor in MIT's Program on Science, Technology, and Society. He is the author of Nuclear Rites: A Weapons Laboratory at the End of the Cold War (1996) and People of the Bomb: Portraits of America's Nuclear Complex (2004) and co-editor of Why America's Top Pundits Are Wrong (2005). He writes a monthly online column for the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists.

Monika Heupel is a postdoctoral fellow at the Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik (German Institute for International and Security Affairs) in Berlin, Germany, where she works in the Global Issues Research Unit. From 2006 to 2007 she was a visiting scholar in the Nonproliferation Program at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in Washington, DC; from 2005 to 2006 she was a postdoctoral fellow in the Peace and Governance Program at the United Nations University in Tokyo, Japan. She recently wrote "Adapting to Transnational Terrorism: The UN Security Council's Evolving Approach to Terrorism," which appeared in the December 2007 issue of Security Dialogue.

C. Kenneth Quinones is director of global studies and professor of Korea studies at Akita International University in Japan. His most recent book is The Complete Idiot's Guide to Understanding North Korea (2004), and he contributes a monthly column to three Japanese newspapers. His two-volume recollections, The US-DPRK Nuclear Negotiations of 1992-94 and Beyond Negotiations: Implementation of the Agreed Framework, were published in Japanese and Korean and are being prepared for publication in English. In 1997 he retired from the Foreign Service after 22 years, including three years in the U.S. Army as a Korean language specialist and cryptanalyst. He served as a political officer in Seoul and principal officer in Pusan (1981-1987) and Washington, DC (1987-1989), as the deputy director of the Mutual Assistance Office in Japan (1990-1992), and as the North Korea affairs officer and North Korea analyst in Washington, DC (1992-1994). He was the first U.S. diplomat to visit North Korea (1992), the first to meet Kim Il Sung, and the first to serve in both South and North Korea. He holds a Ph.D. in History and East Asian languages from Harvard University.

Karthika Sasikumar is a postdoctoral fellow at the Simons Centre for Disarmament and Non-Proliferation Research, a unit of the Liu Institute for Global Issues at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver. She received her Ph.D. from the Government Department at Cornell University in 2006. Her research interests are international regimes, nuclear nonproliferation, and counterterrorism, with a regional focus on South Asia. Her article, "India's Emergence as a 'Responsible' Nuclear Power" appeared in the November 2007 issue of International Journal. She is currently working on a manuscript on India's relationship with the global nonproliferation regime.

Nonproliferation Review, Vol. 15, No. 1, March 2008

ISSN 1073-6700 print/ISSN 1746-1766 online/08/010005-02

© 2008 Monterey Institute of International Studies, James Martin Center for Nonproliferation Studies

DOI: 10.1080/10736700701853488

6 CONTRIBUTORS

Barbara Slavin is the author of Bitter Friends, Bosom Enemies: Iran, the U.S., and the Twisted Path to Confrontation (2007). Senior diplomatic reporter for USA Today for the past eleven years, she is currently a Jennings Randolph Fellow at the U.S. Institute of Peace in Washington, DC, where she is researching Iran's rising influence in the Middle East. She has reported for the Economist, New York Times, Business Week, and Newsday, among other publications.

Christopher A. Stevens is an assistant professor of political science at the University of Nebraska–Kearney. He holds an M.A. in Political Science from the University of Delaware and a Ph.D. in Politics from Brandeis University. He is currently working on a revision of his dissertation, "Identity Politics and National Security: Estonia, Kazakhstan, and Ukraine Compared," which explores the theoretical basis for the pattern of interstate conflict and cooperation that has emerged in the former Soviet space.

Masafumi Takubo is a Tokyo-based writer. He founded the Kakujo.net (Nuclear Information) website in 2005 to provide readers, including the media and activists, with timely, in-depth analysis and research tools related to nuclear issues. His articles have been published in several magazines, and he taught a course on peace studies at Hosei University in Tokyo. Since 1975 he has worked with Gensuikin, the Japan Congress against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs, in various capacities and helped organize numerous international conferences. He has also worked with the Japan Broadcasting Corporation to produce programs on nuclear weapons and served as an interpreter for Academy Award-winning director Steven Okazaki's 2005 documentary film The Mushroom Club.